Writing is a very important part of science; it is used to document and communicate ideas, activities and findings to others. Scientific writing can take many forms from a lab notebook, synopsis writing to a project report, or from a paper in an academic journal to an article in a scientific magazine. Science could not really exist, if scientists did not record every experiment performed, every data collected, every result obtained. But scientific writing doesn't mean to only keep records of progress and information, but to actually publish the results of studies in scientific journals. While keeping records is quite easy to do, publishing scientific papers can be really difficult, and especially for young researchers who are just starting to discover the world of scientific publications. Scientific and research writing is crucial for a career in sciences & other fields. Doing research is only half of the picture. If the results of research studies are not published - and where they are published has an important impact also - other researchers can not appreciate the value of the experiments or studies accomplished, they cannot further build on it, the public cannot trust the information and overall science can not develop and grow.

This workshop will deal with all these issues.....
